To me, this picture depicts what it was like growing up having both my Algerian and Irish background as very prevalent things in my life. This was just our normal Sunday dinner, the equivalent to a Sunday roast. I took this action shot to capture the diversity in my life. I like how you can see my Irish family on one side of the table and my Algerian family on the other, sharing the same food and embracing our cultures. This picture holds a lot of meaning to me, personally, even though this is a regular occurrence in my house. I enjoy capturing pictures of my normality because it reminds me that I come from two very rich cultures. My culture is a large part of my identity, which is why I so often enjoy capturing moments such as this one.
